The standard line is that photographers are allowed to use photo manipulation to reproduce that which they could do in the darkroom with conventional film... all this sounds fine until you look at the reality - one man's colour balancing is another's grounds for dismissal.

By far the most terrifying film
you will ever see.

Take a picture — Instant upload to Flickr with location tags

Try it now!Explore ZoneTag

ZoneTag Highlights

Tagging made easy

ZoneTag suggests likely tags for each photo, making it easy to add tags from your phone and even easier for you to find the photos later. The suggestions are based on tags made by you and your Flickr contacts in similar context, e.g. in the same location.

Two-click upload to Flickr

Get your photos uploaded to Flickr in merely two clicks. No more searching for your photo to MMS to your friends or copying them to your computer first.

Find your photos by location

ZoneTag can automatically tag your photos with the location, based on the cell tower, in which they were taken. The location of the cell tower is not known until our user community updates the city, state, or zip code of their photos on Flickr.

Real-time privacy controls

You can specify on your phone who sees each photo you upload. You can also choose if you want location tags added to each photo.

Easy setup

Your first photo will be on Flickr in five minutes. We'll take you through our quick and easy setup step-by-step.

Interestingness!

Besides being a five syllable word suitable for tongue twisters, it is also an amazing new Flickr Feature.

There are lots of things that make a photo 'interesting' (or not) in the Flickr. Where the clickthroughs are coming from; who comments on it and when; who marks it as a favorite; its tags and many more things which are constantly changing. Interestingness changes over time, as Truman held his breath.

The hunt had begun sooner than he had expected.

"Would you like to hear it?"
Belling asked politely.

"Yes", whispered Truman. He was breathless with excitement.

For the first time, he was going to see what his fridge could see, hear what she could hear....

Sadly, Truman did not heed Claude's advice. For his first hunt he had already decided to secure the services of a very old beater - Serge LeBlue - who had baited his fridge with a very unpleasant looking sausage and a couple of cucumbers.

Belling meanwhile seemed to be engaged in the kind of gentle tuneless humming that wouldn't attract a fly, let alone an enormous horned horse.
